

PR
6023
L9958i

IRISH ECLOGUES

EDWARD E. LYSAGHT

UC SOUTHERN REGIONAL LIBRARY FACILITY

A
0
0
0
8
6
4
9
0
3
0

THE LIBRARY
OF
THE UNIVERSITY OF CALIFORNIA
LOS ANGELES

Digitized by the Internet Archive in 2007 with funding from Microsoft Corporation

IRISH ECLOGUES

IRISH ECLOGUES
BY EDWARD E. LYSAGHT

MAUNSEL & COMPANY, LTD.
DUBLIN AND LONDON

1915

PK
6023
L99586

DEDICATION

BEAUTY I meet with everywhere :

*A rounded bosom partly bare,
A maiden's errant lock of hair
Tossed in the balmy southern air,
Eyes of violet deep as rare,
Eyes that challenge the bold to dare,
Beauty that needs no craftsman's care ;
But none I see that is half so fair
As the girl at home who is pledged to share
My life with me.*

*Her beauty is not for all to see
Like a rainbow's obvious brilliancy,
It is traced with a delicate subtlety
For I do not find a treasury
Of perfect features, perfectly*

v

859901

DEDICATION

*Planned with a sculptor's symmetry,
But a face that is full of energy,
Yet soft like an old time melody
In the haunting Celtic minor key
And an eye suffused with a sympathy
That blends the whole into harmony,
As, our arms entwined, she looks at me
In the firelight glow.*

Marseilles, 1913.

CONTENTS

I HEARD A LONE CALF CALLING	9
A RECOLLECTION OF A COLD WET NIGHT IN 1909	11
CAITILIN'S FIELD	16
THE MARCH FAIR	20
THE JOY OF PERMANENCE	24
THE RIVER MEADOW	26
PALES AND CERES	28
SOME OF MY WORKMEN	30
THE GREY HORSE	38
THE ASS	39
THE SHEEP DOG	40
TO MY DOG	41
LOUGH DERG	43
DO YOU NEVER WANT TO BE ALONE	54
A DROWSY WINTER'S DAY	55
FURZE	57
Asuirín	59
FOOTNOTE	62

AT 201 200

1	...
2	...
3	...
4	...
5	...
6	...
7	...
8	...
9	...
10	...
11	...
12	...
13	...
14	...
15	...
16	...
17	...
18	...
19	...
20	...
21	...
22	...
23	...
24	...
25	...
26	...
27	...
28	...
29	...
30	...
31	...
32	...
33	...
34	...
35	...
36	...
37	...
38	...
39	...
40	...
41	...
42	...
43	...
44	...
45	...
46	...
47	...
48	...
49	...
50	...

I HEARD A LONE CALF CALLING

I HEARD a lone calf calling
Plaintively, drearily, for the mother it had lost.

I stood and watched the hungry cows around me

Picking the scanty grass of early March.

I leant awhile upon the four-pronged fork

The day's work chanced to make my tool,

And as I stood and gave my thoughts their liberty

They came upon a way yet unexplored.

Ah ! many a day I'd worked and stood

Where I now idled a brief spell,

But never seen the beauty of the life I led,

Or felt how much the life of every day could show

To one who cared to read.

I HEARD A LONE CALF CALLING

'Twas like the sudden glorious discovery
A man makes when he finds he loves a woman ;

Her features which he saw and knew before Change wondrously, as by some weird enchantment of the gods.,

And as I went on working till the twilight came

My brain, awakened in its gladness, wildly
sped its way

In mad and formless song.

A RECOLLECTION OF A COLD WET NIGHT IN 1909

MY smoky lantern throws its flickering ray

Now on the cobbles, now upon the walls ;

I hear the log chains rattling in the stalls,
I hear the chestnut whinnying to the grey ;
Below the gate the fragrant scent of hay,
Saved on a pleasant summer's day,
Despite the cold raw wind and sleet recalls
My shivering mind to thoughts of summer zephyrs.

There in the lower yard the thirty heifers,
The calves we knew last year,
Sleek-coated, placid, mild-faced animals,
Warm bedded, care not whether snow flake falls

A COLD WET NIGHT IN 1909

Or midnight skies are clear,
But in one long unceasing chorus,
A duotone sonorous,
They munch and champ, and chew the fragrant fodder.
Their calm contentment throws on me a spell,
Their peaceful mood floods me—and all seems well.

A minute since the cold incessant rain
Beating in gusts against my lonely shutter,
The big bleak empty barrack's ghostly
sounds,
The icy draughts that made my candle gutter,
The four bare walls that were the gloomy bounds
Of my inhabited domain,
The narrow bed with blankets still untended,
The nail where hung the rags that no one mended,

A COLD WET NIGHT IN 1909

Had filled my heart with something near to pain.

I thought with longing of the idle days
I spent at college, of the cheery room
Where to sit single brought no lonely gloom
Upon the brain,
Remembered enviously the jovial friends
Who came to share a glass, a rowdy song,
And went their ways
Without a care, a harum-scarum throng—

But now the sounds and smells around me
From my obsession have unbound me,
No more a prey to dull misgiving
I feel again the joy of living,
Though by the storm my sense is staggered,
Though I have felt forlorn and friendless
Drifting upon an ocean endless,
A single old familiar greeting
Can send my morbid fancies fleeing.

A COLD WET NIGHT IN 1909

A single perfume from the haggard,
The subtle scent of sheltered cattle,
A startled rooster's tittle-tattle,
The champ of horses in the stable,
The windcock creaking on the gable,
Even a new calved heifer's moan,
Her plaintive yearning monotone,
Makes me feel less alone.

Oh, ye Poets who have sung
Praises of our country life,
When ye hymned your tuneful words
What knew ye of midnight work ;
Of the cares that daily lurk
Round a farmer's flocks and herds ;
Had ye ever used the knife
While a life in balance hung ;
Had ye ever left your beds
To tend a suffering horse's colic :

A COLD WET NIGHT IN 1909

Had ye sat all night and shivered
Till a heifer was delivered
Of a stubborn first born calf?
Farmers cannot always laugh,
Life is not all fun and frolic,
Poetry her fancy sheds
On reality bucolic.

Yet for all your ignorance
Ye have sung the truth by chance.
Though the seasons may not favour,
Though the cows are short of milk,
Though disease attack my fold
And my bullocks are unsold,
Though my farm's remote and far
From the towns where pleasures are,
Though I go not clothed in silk
Yet my fealty will not waver;
I still find the world's romance
Here in my inheritance.

CAITILIN'S FIELD

I SING the song of the man who ha
sweated and toiled

All day at the saving of hay and th
making of tramps *

On a day when his work is well spent, an
the crop is not spoiled

By the rain that he damns.

When the dew has gone off of the ground and the heat of the sun

Is very near able to melt the prong of h fork,

When already the small little breeze the tas
has begun,

Then man sets to work.

* Local word for wynds or tramp-cocks, pronounced tram.

CAITILIN'S FIELD

Five acres of good meadow hay is in Caitilin's field,

In windrows we have it made up, 'twill not rain, we've no fear,

'Tis only the fools who make cocks when the clouds are concealed

And the sky is all clear.

Ten men there are with me as well as myself, and a boy

To ride on the horse that draws in the hay
from the rows ;

We'll easily tramp it by night, and we'll count it a joy

To do it, God knows.

Three tramps are kept going at once, for the meadow is flat

And the skeeter works smoothly, and quickly
its loads are upturned,

CAITILIN'S FIELD

Till the sweat runs off us in streams, and the man that is fat

His wage will have earned.

There's skill in the work, for it isn't mere ignorant labouring

To build up a tramp while two men are forking their best,

And not have it turn when its made, to be for the neighbouring

Farmers a jest.

There's skill in the skeeting, there's skill in the pulling, there's skill

In the way that the hay is forked off of the ground, for you'll see

When a man comes out of a town, though he work with a will,

What a fool he does be.

CAITILIN'S FIELD

Tired we may be when at night we have forked the last sop,
The last sugan is tied, and we put on our coats to go home,
But we wouldn't change place with the King in his Parliament shop,
Or the Pope that's in Rome.

For what do the dwellers in palaces know of the feel
Of the arm that is wearied with work, yet ready for more,
Or the appetite simple and keen a man brings to the meal
His house has in store?

THE MARCH FAIR

THREE o'clock, and with a start
I waken, cursing fair and mart.
And the bullocks, if they knew,
Surely would be cursing too ;
Seven English miles have they,
Long before the dawn of day,
Seven English miles to tramp.
(Where the divil is the lamp ?)
Bullocks ! In your innocence
Yours a day of abstinence.
It will take two hours and more
For us to go to Killimor.
Then when we're there we'll stand forlorn Like long wooled sheep that have been shorn,
Too early in the summer.

THE MARCH FAIR

'Tis eight o'clock and ne'er a bid :
What fools to come—yet well we did,
For out from yonder caravan,
Where Mrs. Browne wields her tin-can
And serves cold herrings, tea and bread
To Michael, Paddy, Tom and Ned,
There comes a man who's slep' it out :
He's a shipper, there's no doubt.
I know him, sure, 'tis Johnny Curtin,
He'll buy our cattle now for certain.
I ask a hundred for the ten,
He scans them slightly and then
He turns away without a word.
I wink my eye to Mick, the herd.
“Come here, I want you, Sir,” cries he,
“What is the bullocks' price to be ?”
—“They're not worth nine.” But Jim Molony
(We all know Jim, the poor old crony)

THE MARCH FAIR

Puts in his word without a smile :
“ I don’t care which, but wait awhile
Ask nine fifteen and cut a crown.”
—“ Is that the way you’d beat me down ? ”
John strikes my hand and goes away.
And then comes back again to say
He’ll not break Jim Molony’s word.
(We all say that, we’re so absurd)
And so at last the bargain’s struck ;
It’s left to me about the luck.
“ Begob ! ” says Mick, “ for all his tricks
They’re dear enough at nine twelve six.”
So later on when we’ve been paid,
We’ll drink their health in lemonade.
(The devil sweep those pledges)

Herded with others, scores and scores,
Our bullocks, mixed with cows and stores,

THE MARCH FAIR

Are driven through the thronging fair
Out to the railway station, where Numbers of trucks, all just the same,
Swallow the beasts we knew by name,
Which lose in leaving Mick and me
Their individuality.

God ! On what venture ye embark,
To feed at length some city clerk
Whose widest world is Blackpool.

THE JOY OF PERMANENCE

OLD John with his plough may turn a scrape

As true as the flight of an arrow,
But well he knows that it can't escape
The levelling stroke of the harrow.

Danny has built a faultless rick,
I never saw one to beat it ;
But his work is not made with stone or brick—

Later on the cattle will eat it.

I have shaken oats from year to year,
But at heart I have laboured sadly,
For it all looks the same when the fields are clear,
Though I scatter it never so badly.

THE JOY OF PERMANENCE

But here is a work that I feel is worth
The full of our human endeavour,
For we're leaving our mark on the face of the earth,
A mark that will stay for ever.

We are battling with ancient barren land,
Boulders and straggling heather ;
We have worked till the tan on our arms is tanned
Double deep by the cut of the weather.

Rocks and stones we have raised and moved
Till a great wide wall has risen
Round the bounds of a field that no man loved
And the goats used to count a prison.

And now it is levelled and limed and ploughed :
The brown earth calls for the sower.
In six months this will be one of a crowd
When it falls to the scythe of the mower.

THE RIVER MEADOW

GRACEFULLY, steadily, easily
Three men are mowing
Bending and rising they capture the Rhythm of rowing.

Swish goes the cut of the scythes as they Glide all together
Through the cool stems of the river hay
In the hot weather.

Then at the end of the swath comes the Sound of the honing
Grating but ringing melodiously
Like a bee droning.

THE RIVER MEADOW

Morning and noon time and evening
Comes a young maiden
Porter and buttermilk carrying Willingly laden.

And while they drink under shadowy
Willows eternal
The meadow distils for them heavenly Scent of sweet-vernal.*

* It may not be generally known that sweet-vernal is the name of the grass which gives the characteristic scent to freshly cut hay.

PALES AND CERES

PALES

I AM the goddess of the Golden Vale,
I rule the downs and the fat plains of Meath,

And to my devotees I can bequeath
The rich sleek ox, the overflowing pail,
The cool of summer dairies in the dale,
Where lies the homestead, girdled with a wreath

Of prying creepers groping underneath
The thatch, the dingy beams within to scale.

And in the luscious pastures stand my kine,
Some suckle calves, some plod home to the byre,

Bullocks knee deep in pasture graze their fill,
Or seek the shallows in a careless line,
Or under shady branches lie quite still Chewing the cud with jaws that never tire.

PALES AND CERES

CERES

HEED not O Eire, the specious promises
Of idle Pales, hearken unto me,
I am the queen of life and energy ;
I check the hopeful exile's eagerness ;
I keep the life blood in my villages,
For when I govern a community
There will the pleasant sound of labour be—
I feel no pride in ranches tenantless.

My beauty lies in sight of human toil,
In the green corn when pastures still are white,
Or in a yellowing cornfield in the breeze,
In the sweet smell when freshly turns the soil,
In rows of pointed stooks at glimmering
night,
Or thresher's hum like buzz of million bees.

SOME OF MY WORKMEN

I—DANNY COGHLAN

DANIEL Coghlan, down from the mountains,
Tough hardy Dan, from beyant in the mountains,
You're the best workman I know.
Thin is your arm, sure,
Yerra, what harm, sure,
'Tis you have the go !

You have the knowledge, you have the strength, too :
Knowledge is great, but men must have
strength too,
Each by itself is no good ;
Then you are quick, Dan,
Some men are thick, Dan,
Thicker than wood.

SOME OF MY WORKMEN

Keenly you work ; 'tis hard to get keen men.
I love to be watching or working with keen men,

Men who learnt labour at home.

You have ten acres, man,

Keep it, be Jakers, man,

Let emigrants roam.

You are the right man, one I can trust in,
I could never leave home if I'd no one to trust in

And know that my work will be done.

The divil a loss, boys,

While he is your boss, boys,

The divil a one.

You're independent, never obsequious,
A man of free birth is never obsequious,
He leaves it to schemer and slave.

If this poem should live, lad,

'Tis all I've to give, lad,

For all that you gave.

SOME OF MY WORKMEN

II— — — — —

I LOOK upon you as a curiosity,
— — — — — you master of excuse and wile.

You clothe your tortuous scheming with verbosity,

But I confess you only make me smile.

You are a part of that still puzzling mystery
That English rule bequeathed us from the past,

Your type is simply the result of history,—
And into history it's sinking fast.

SOME OF MY WORKMEN

III—JAMESY

WHEN there's a dirty job to do,
Or one man has the work of two,

Nobody ever questions who—

Be there many or be there few :

'Tis Jamesy Shaughnessy !

When we are loading posts of oak

Upon a high-wheeled one-horse yoke

Who has the heavy ends bespoke

And lifts till his arms are almost broke

But Jamesy Shaughnessy !

SOME OF MY WORKMEN

Yet there's one man who's always willing
No matter if he's in the killing
Of pigs, or maybe he'll be filling
Dung carts all day, or ridges tilling,
Though he may not know a crown from a shilling,

That's Jamesy Shaughnessy !

'Tis equal what or where the place,
He always wants to force the pace,
At digging spuds he's mad to race,
Or hoeing : " Sure, 'tis all a case,"

Says Jamesy Shaughnessy.

But then at digging spuds or hoeing,
And even binding sheaves or mowing,
When you're too fond of rapid going
The bad results will soon be showing,

O, Jamesy Shaughnessy !

SOME OF MY WORKMEN

His beard is just a tangled mat,
He always wears an old hard hat,
And he never stops to smoke or chat—
What can I do with a man like that,
Eh, Jamesy Shaughnessy ?

If I give him a job that's tasty or neat
Sure, his own gossoon will have him beat,
All he has is muscle and bone.
I must send him off and leave him alone
For he'll work his best without deceit,
Nor go away till the job's complete,
What do you say, Jamesy ?
For I have to get the best that I can
Out of every labouring man,
I don't care whether he's Jim or Dan
Or Jamesy Shaughnessy.

It is only fair to Jamesy to say that these verses were written some years ago, before I knew him as well as I do now. The hard hat is discarded, the beard neatly trimmed, and Jamesy, who has found his true vocation as yardman, is now one of my most trusted and reliable men.

SOME OF MY WORKMEN

IV—THADY ANGLIM (R. I. P.)

THADY, for all your shaggy face
And halting crab-like gait,
I must accord to you a place
Among the verses in this book :
You'll never learn your fate.
For all your thoughts, your very look,
Told of a purpose undeterred,
You had but one delight,
You only wept when loss occurred
Among the members of our herd,
Now, we are weeping you, interred
For ever from our sight.

SOME OF MY WORKMEN

V—WILLIAM MORRISSEY
(1843-1913)

NO mighty warrior lies in that cold grave,
No king who bears a high illustrious name,

Nor politician with a transient fame,
Nor even a singer famous for his stave.
You were a simple honest man. No knave
Can breathe a scandal, find a tint of shame,
Nor for a meanness lay on you the blame,
A simple servant always : never a slave.

What can I say of you in greater praise ?
A simple honest man—were you here now
You would not wish a higher compliment.
So when at seventy years you've done your days,
And to a hostile world have made your bow,
I say what I have said before you went.

THE GREY HORSE

I LOVE the summer months because I eat
The fresh green grass, because my tired feet

Find soft moist standing in the time of heat.

I love the winter, when my rattling chain
Binds me in reach of hay and good plump grain

And a strong roof keeps out the wind and rain.

THE ASS

LONG, long ago I was a foal,
A happy, shaggy little foal,
I used to gallop, graze and roll,
And when I thought, I thought the whole World was a meadow.

But now I work and pull a car,
A heavy overloaded car ;
I smell the meadows from afar :
But only once a week they are
More than a shadow.

THE SHEEP DOG

LEAPING and barking, madly careering, Nimbly avoiding their kicks, I am steering

The dairy cows home to the byre ;

The sluggish cows home.

Working the sheep is my joy of existence,
Rounding them into the fold from a distance,
Snapping the last as he runs
Through the gate of the pen.

Trotting sedately when worktime is finished
I follow my master, my keenness diminished,
Till I stretch myself out by the fire
At the feet of the men.

TO MY DOG

OH what do we care for the boasts of the shooters
Who prate of their bags and their battues and drives,
Who ride to their moors and their coverts in motors
And chat while they wait to other men's wives ;
Who leave all the work and the fun to the beaters,
All thinking and craft to their headkeeper's brains,
Who dream not of duck but of Darracq two seaters,
Whose joy in the bag is how much it contains.

TO MY DOG

Eat this bone for you've work before you to-day ;

Now a bite for me and then we'll away.

LOUGH DERG

I

AS I push out my boat
And carelessly float
Down the sluggish stream
To the beds of reeds
And the deep stemmed weeds
Where the minnows dream,

Soon a startled Coot
With trailing foot
Leaves a bubbling wake,
As he splashes away
To the bosom grey
Of the open lake ;

LOUGH DERG

And the dabchick strives
With his slippery dives
To escape unseen ;
And the divers swim,
At the water's rim,
To their rushy screen.

The kittiwakes' white
Gives a touch of light
To the lough's dull breast,
As they rise and dip,
Like a faery ship,
At the waves' behest.

LOUGH DERG

II

A CLUMP of high green reeds now
yellowing in decay,
An island landless and without a shore,
I know of such a hiding place in every little bay
Where I can check my boat's drift, where she and I can stay,
And I can learn the lake bird's lore.

First the gulls, the laughing gulls, come circling round my head,
Laughing they pitch on yonder rock,
And sometimes with them a tern uncomraded,

LOUGH DERG

That child of the breezes in some aery
kingdom bred,
Circles still, while below the gulls mock.

Small and unnoticed the dotterel and his mate
Come swinging and darting on their skimming course,
They alight, but to return, or if by chance they wait
Rest never finds them, but an evergoading fate
Drives them on with an unseen force.

With a rushing sound of wings,
Like a sudden breeze
When it strikes the tops
Of an ancient wood,
A flock of wild duck comes,

LOUGH DERG

With unchecked speed
They swish through the air
In a flashing curve
Dropping upon the water's face
As lightly as a mayfly ;
There they float and idly swim,
Idly paddle in the shallows.
Some stand up and stretch a wing,
Tired with speed of journeying,
One turns back his head to sleep,
One—but I have made some sound—
They are off and far away
Lost among the misty grey
I can see them flashing dim
Making for securer shallows.

LOUGH DERG

III

THEN the swerving plover, that gossiping bird
Who every moment swoops out of his course,
As if some far away music he heard,
And he wanted to trace the elusive charm
Of the phantom melody down to its source
At the brim of the water, nor comes to harm
As he falls headlong from a dizzy height,
And fluttering down his comrades follow
In a mass confused till they reunite
With a tern-like grace and the ease of a swallow
Into a disciplined serried array,
One aimless purpose common to all ;

LOUGH DERG

All instantly answering one common whim,
They wing their devious voyage away,
Hastening still to that unknown call,
That will-o'-the-wisp at the water's brim
Which they found not there, but seek it now
Among the boulders or after the plough,
And their wings flash white as they wheel in the sun,
Or gambol and tumble in aery fun.

LOUGH DERG

IV

ON MY WAY HOMEWARD AT THE END OF THE DAY

A GENTLE breeze that has timely veered

From the west to the east, and has made of the sky

An indigo vault of transparent hue,

A deep-toned matchless infinite blue,

Is helping my boat, as I lazily ply

My oars on the course I have oft-times steered ;

But I think tonight there is something weird

In the change of the sky and the half-risen
moon,

LOUGH DERG

For the curlew's call seems eerier now
As, seeking his mates, he crosses my bow,
And the coots who croak in the rushy lagoon,
Where they built their nests and their nestlings reared,
Or utter that short sharp sound of their own
Like the click of a mason chiselling stone,
Make the world that I know seem aloof and unknown.

I come to some rocks in the midst of the lake
Where the pillibeen meeks have found their rest
Counting their bivouac safe from harm,
Till the sentinel sounds the note of alarm,
And their chattering stops and the ceaseless quest
Once more their winnowing wings undertake.
Should they sleep the redshank is ever awake;

LOUGH DERG

As the watchdog barks when a stranger appears,

So his shrilling to tardier wild fowl proclaims

The advent of man who murders and maims
(Whom every creature instinctively fears,
And only the dog will never forsake)—

Though his throat is slender and long his bill

Those three wild notes quiver piercing shrill,
To tell of the enemy out to kill.

The stillness of night settles down once more,
Stiller now since the silence was rent by the whir

That the wings of the pillibeens made as they rose,

Or the rumbling creak of a cart as it goes
On its homeward way, or a cottager

LOUGH DERG

Sings a snatch of song on a distant shore,
And the sound comes clearly travelling o'er
The stretch of the tiny rippling waves
And makes when it ceases the stillness more still.

But the quiet has ever a murmuring trill,
The faintest of echoes from watery graves,
Where naiads forgotten still whisper their lore,

Where the trout and the red-finned perch evade

The grisly king-pike's ambushade
As they glide through the weeds of a limpid glade

Fathoms down.

DO YOU NEVER WANT TO BE ALONE

DO you never want to be alone
Away from the octopus—man,
To be at one with the pine trees' moan,
Where they moan in monotonous monotone
As they moaned when the world began;
To don the wings of the buzzing drone ;
To wander free with the old god Pan ;
To ponder awhile on the wondrous plan
That governs both saint and courtesan,
Their destiny and our own ?

A DROWSY WINTER'S DAY

SOMETIMES when on a drowsy winter's day

My hands refuse to work and I am filled

With a mad wish to give my senses play,
Or pen the words my fancy has distilled,
Then, as by chance, my steps will seek a path,

Shunning to meet a single shepherd's dog,
To some uncharted peaceful solitude.

For in this ancient country many a rath
And rolling mountain and forsaken bog
Offer to share with me my lonely mood.

Oh God ! who made them, what a mastery
Of all the arts has your omnipotence,
To have created such a symphony
Of sound and colour ; my benumbéd sense

A DROWSY WINTER'S DAY

Dulls ere I find some words to tell of it.
Gone are the mists but now that cast a gloom
Over the land and the belated sun
Shines palely, like a lamp in evening lit
While still some daylight strays into a room
Before the curtain's drawn and tea's begun.

Palely he shines, yet touching by his glow
The madder birch-tops with a tint of rose
And purple shadows, as with motion slow
The branches sway where'er the light wind blows,

Marking the hollies in their sombre green (Clothed midst the naked boughs of migthier trees)

Where they still keep the soft rain's glistening dew ;

Or in the furze that bounds the old bohreen
Some bolder blossom than the rest he sees,
And lights this tiny speck of golden hue.

FURZE

YELLOWER—far—than Meredith's
yellow picture,

Golden as no other thing is golden in
the earth,

Ireland is golden in spring and early summer:
Gold is winter's deathbed, gold is summer's birth.

Big beds of furze, sheets of golden blossom,
Stretch gently sloping on every mountain rise,

Hedgerows and ditches are all a mass of furze bloom,

Shining, though no sunlight gilds our opal skies.

A HISTORY OF THE CITY OF BOSTON

FROM THE FIRST SETTLEMENT TO THE PRESENT TIME
BY SAMUEL JOHNSON

YESTERDAY, THE 10TH OF SEPTEMBER, 1790, THE CITY OF BOSTON WAS VISITED BY A SEVERE STORM, WHICH DID GREAT DAMAGE TO THE BUILDINGS AND TO THE LIVES OF THE INHABITANTS.

THE STORM BEING VERY SEVERE, THE WINDS BLEW FROM THE NORTH AND NORTH-EAST, AND THE RAIN WAS VERY HEAVY. THE DAMAGE DONE TO THE BUILDINGS WAS VERY GREAT, AND MANY LIVES WERE LOST.

THE STORM BEING VERY SEVERE, THE WINDS BLEW FROM THE NORTH AND NORTH-EAST, AND THE RAIN WAS VERY HEAVY. THE DAMAGE DONE TO THE BUILDINGS WAS VERY GREAT, AND MANY LIVES WERE LOST.

THE STORM BEING VERY SEVERE, THE WINDS BLEW FROM THE NORTH AND NORTH-EAST, AND THE RAIN WAS VERY HEAVY. THE DAMAGE DONE TO THE BUILDINGS WAS VERY GREAT, AND MANY LIVES WERE LOST.

THE STORM BEING VERY SEVERE, THE WINDS BLEW FROM THE NORTH AND NORTH-EAST, AND THE RAIN WAS VERY HEAVY. THE DAMAGE DONE TO THE BUILDINGS WAS VERY GREAT, AND MANY LIVES WERE LOST.

Aḡuisín.

Tá dúil mór aḡam i mo teanga dútcaraḡ. Beireann sí gheim ar iomḡa fear de mo cineaḡ, aḡur beir-eann sí gheim ormpa anoir. Táim im' macleíḡinn, aḡur ir féidir liom rḡríobaḡ, go mall, ceana féin.
Féac air rin : fear deic mbliḡna ríceḡo ḡ'aoir aḡur oide aḡ teagairḡ a teanga mḡcaraḡo ḡó. Ó'n lá ḡo-rugḡo mé bíor aḡ éirteḡt leir an mḡearla ar ḡac taob. Go deimhin ir áluinn an teanga an ḡearla, aḡur tá clú ar a lirimḡeḡt ar fuio an ḡomain, ac ní h-é teanga mo rinnfear é ; ní fiú mo teanga féin é aḡur fár náḡúrta na haimprie uirte ; ir éaḡcorḡail ar fad atá anam an ḡá teanga. Ní fuláir ḡom foḡluim go ḡuaḡmair aḡur mé im' fear. Súḡann leanḡ teanga a dútcair irteḡ cḡm náḡúrta le bainne cíc a mḡcar ; ir goir mḡreabḡta a aighe ;
cuirtear manta air go fupar.

Fionnann ḡac éir-eannaḡ féin gur b'í an ḡaeḡilḡe
a teanga dútcaraḡ. Cuir-eann an rírinne reo átar mór air-rean, aḡur aircuir-eann teine a átar air rionnt ḡ'earbaḡ a aoire leinḡ. Fionnann tuine an rírinne reo de ríreib, tuine eile i nḡiaḡo a céile ; ac ir iomḡa fear, aḡur bean, leir, a aimpḡ í, aḡur ḡeir-eann tuine éigín a oigreḡt ḡac uile lá féin.
Tá an ḡaeḡilḡe aḡ rleamnuḡaḡ ar an nḡaeḡealtaḡt :
éaluiḡeann an cáilleamaint orḡa fé mar éaluiḡeann

Aḡuisín

cailleamhaint na hóige aḡur na bpeáḡtaḡta ar mhaol
—níor luaithe oḡta 'nā ar ḡaeḡil Alban nā ar na bpeatnaḡaib, oir inḡ na tiorḡaib rin ní náire leir na ḡaoimib uairle a ḡteangā féin ḡo labairt. Áḡ inḡ an nḡalltaḡt bíonn an éainnt a bí fé ḡroḡmear ḡ'á honórad ḡrír i n-aice teangāḡ na nḡabáltóirí.
Bíonn an ḡaeḡilge ḡ'áclor anoir i n-íomḡa bail nā rílríde. Bíonn rí aḡ na macaib-leḡinn i ḡcoláirte na ḡrionóide, mar ní namhaid na héireann luḡt an coláirte rin ḡo léir, fé mar ir ḡóig le ḡaoimib éigin.
Bíonn an ḡaeḡilge aḡ ḡoirreoir, aḡ raor, aḡ ceapḡuirde, aḡ ríú na ḡconḡtáblan ar uairib. Baileḡio ḡaeḡeala i ḡcéilíde aḡur labhairt ḡaeḡilge le n-a céile. I mbaile áta Cliaḡ ḡnío or cionn ḡríḡaḡ líon-tige obair mór aḡur íaḡ aḡ tabhairt ar na lea-baib ḡaeḡilge ḡo labhairt ar ḡtúir aḡur bárla ḡ'foḡluim 'n-a ḡiaib rin. Tá baramhail an pobail aḡ aḡmáil ḡur teangā éoir ḡ'éireannac aḡur ḡ'á ríioḡt an ḡaeḡilge, cé ḡo mbeirí féin nḡ-aorḡa nḡ nḡ-leirḡeamhail cun í foḡluim. Cím é i mbuirdean na caḡrac aḡur íaḡran aḡ cur ainm ḡaeḡealaḡ ar na rráirdeḡaib; ḡaḡuḡḡear crut ḡaeḡealaḡ na n-ainm ar fuinneḡḡaib na ríopaí aḡur ar éairtib; beiríḡ ráiréarta nuairdeḡta leatanaig ḡaeḡilge, aḡur ní fuláir ḡo ḡsoláirib na hOllḡoile Náiríúna i foḡluim.
Mā bíonn baramhail an náiríúin mall bíonn rí cumaraḡ.

ḡo deimhín tá bḡí Cuallann éom lán de ḡaranaḡar le haon áit i n'éirínn. Bior ainm le deirdeannaiḡe; ḡo buaíl ḡream ráirḡi im' éoinnib aḡur mire aḡ ríubal ar

AGUISÍN

an t-scráidh. Is í ngaeóilge a bfuil ar doinne " 'm páirtúin agat " agus is gaeóilge a bíodas ag labhairt agus iad an gaeóilge rúgtha agus a' glaothac ar a céile. Is dóig liom gur ann do atá éirim an roda. Má fogluimeodas na páirtí agus iad an gaeóilge, beid an gaeóilge ag a b*páirtí* féin ar nór cainneteoir óutáras. Ní beid an fiortáir aca, ac ba raoia-ioige a tiocfaid an cainneteoir aca, agus labróidair an gaeóilge agus iad an gaeóilge ná na ruad a ionnta féin. Is féidir leis na páirtí féin ar teanga do raoia. Tá ruil againn go mbeid éire i n-a tír óá-teangain. De bair an dearla leanamair ar ar scráidh agus ar ar raoia leis an raoia eile de'n raoia: comairamair an gaeóilge u'ar teinte-teair agus ruil féin. Saoirair an dearla rinn ó beid óilead; raoia an gaeóilge rinn ó beid raoia.

Tá na raoia in ar raoia do raoia, ac ní'l raoia raoia: ní h-é mo raoia ac mo raoia go raoia an raoia.

FOOTNOTE *

LIKE so many others of my race I have become obsessed by my ignorance of what should be my native language. It has gripped me, and so I am a learner : am already able to write haltingly. But think what it means to be taught your mother tongue when for thirty years your companions have spoken around you none but a tongue which, however beautiful in itself, however glorious the literature it has produced, is not the language of your forefathers, is not even a modern modification of it, but one whose very essence and genius is completely strange to it ; to learn laboriously as a man what should be absorbed as a child, when the mind is still an unbroken field and the whole being is receptive and impressionable as it can never be again.

Yet something of what is lost by this is regained in the enthusiasm which pervades each Irishman when he makes the discovery for himself that Gaelic is the native tongue of Ireland. To some the discovery comes suddenly, to some gradually, but many have made it and many are making it daily. As Gaelic dies out in the Gaeltacht, and dies there faster than it dies in the Highlands of Scotland or the other branch of the Celtic tongue dies in Wales, because our Irish upper classes are dead as such, in the Gaultacht it is reviving and again lifting its once despised head beside its foreign conqueror. In unexpected places you will meet the Gaelic now: students there are in Trinity College who have it (an institution erroneously but not altogether unnaturally believed by many Irishmen to be anti-Irish); you will meet a porter on a Dublin railway station, a barber's assistant, a shoemaker, even a policeman who has it; it is spoken at ceilidhs at night where Gaels foregather; the superhuman effort has even been made and accomplished by, I believe, over thirty families in Dublin of bringing up their children in their infancy in the Irish language only, without a word of English. Everywhere I see evidences that the Irish public (even if it has not the youth or energy in most cases to carry out its belief to its logical conclusions) is beginning to feel that Gaelic ought to be the national language. Why else do we have a corporation, not very many of whose members are bilingual, posting the names of the streets in Gaelic; shopkeepers painting the Gaelic form of their names on window and van; newspapers with their Gaelic columns; Gaelic a compulsory subject in the new National University? When public opinion is slow it is generally powerful.

* Translation of Agusín.

FOOTNOTE

I was in Bray recently, surely as anglicized a place as there is to be found in Ireland, and as I was walking along the esplanade a number of small children ran into me : “’m páirdeán agat,” said one to me, and they ran off playing, and shouting to one another not in English but in Irish. Here it seems to me is the gist of the whole matter. If the children learn the language when they are young, their children in turn will acquire it naturally as native speakers acquire it, if not with the true native speaker’s blar, at least with the fluency that will make it their natural language of self-expression, and we shall have attained our ideal—which is to be a bilingual nation, keeping English as the language of commerce and intercourse with the outer world, and Irish as the language of our homes and our national life. English will save us from being insular, Irish from being provincial.

FOOTNOTE

The foregoing verses are of Ireland, but they are not Gaelic : it was my fate, not I, decided that.

UNIVERSITY OF CALIFORNIA LIBRARY

Los Angeles

This book is DUE on the last date stamped below.

PR Lysaght -
6023 Irish eclogues
L9958i

UC SOUTHERN REGIONAL LIBRARY FACILITY

A 000 864 903 0

PR
6023
L9958i

